

The Coriolis effect diverts air flowing north-south toward east-west, which causes the single cell in each hemisphere to split into three cells.

